

Catalyse | Change in Action

The CAT Practitioner course is a two year training for core mental health professionals leading to accreditation and professional membership of the Association for Cognitive Analytic Therapy (ACAT) consisting of:

Training Days run across two years with ten days each year, starting with two days in October, two in November, four days from January to May and ending with a two day residential in June. The training covers the theory and core concepts of CAT and issues common to all psychotherapies within the CAT context. There is a balance of presentations, clinical applications, experiential learning and skills training inputs.

Seminar groups supplement the teaching.

Personal therapy requirements are to complete a 16-session CAT during training.

Supervised clinical work continues throughout the course and trainees work with a minimum of eight clients supervised weekly by an accredited CAT supervisor, usually in a group format. This may extend beyond the two years depending on the individual trainee's case mix and circumstances.

Assessment involves clinical appraisal and written work: an essay and case study in each year. The first year case study includes submission of an audio-recording of a CAT session to provide formative feedback as part of that assessment.

The course is based in the North of England with training days in Manchester and the residential usually in South Yorkshire. Trainees are matched to local supervisors and the seminar groups are run at venues chosen by trainees.

We provide a list of CAT training therapists.
